

It still has not been made perfectly clear whether using the cellular or electronic devices is safe on board an airborne aircraft. Make this point clear first since it has not been well communicated yet. It sounds like whether talking disturbs other passengers is a different matter and is not necessarily dependent on a cellular device. What's annoying is uninformed flight attendants still parroting that these devices interfere with navigation equipment and it's therefore dangerous to use them. So far I've never heard flight attendants say that the use of them may annoy other passengers.